BAY POINT SCHOOLS – CONDITIONAL RELEASE PROGRAM

The Conditional Release Program works to aide youth who are re-entering the community from a residential commitment program. Conditional Release begins the day a student is discharged from the residential program and returns home. The conditional release counselor, who is assigned to the student, is responsible for the student's on-going success in the community. The conditional release program is approximately 1-year in length, with 4 different phases of care.

Phase I - During phase one of conditional release, the student is seen face-to-face 4 times per week by the conditional release counselor to assist with all the immediate transition needs of the youth. This phase lasts for approximately 30 days.

Phase II - The second phase of follow up ranges from 30 to 90 days after the student is discharged from the residential program. During this phase, the counselor is responsible for making two face-to-face contacts per week with the student.

Phase III - The third phase of conditional release ranges between 90 and 120 days after the student is discharged from the residential program. Throughout phase three the conditional release counselor is required to make one face-to-face contact per week with the student.

Phase IV - The final phase is considered the low intensity phase and the counselor makes 1 monthly face-to-face contact with the student for 6 months. The total conditional release contact lasts for approximately 1-year.

INTENSIVE DELINQUENCY DIVERSION SERVICES (IDDS)

Intensive Delinquency Diversion Services (IDDS) serve male and female youth, under the age of 18, who have been referred to the Department for behavior, which if committed by an adult, would be a criminal act. The targeted age group is under 16 years of age. Youth referred to this program will have been assessed by the Department as being at high-risk of becoming serious or chronic offenders. The typical length of youth participation in the program is 5 to 7 months. The determination that a youth is ready to be released from the program is based on the youth's performance in the program, level of progress, and assessment of threat to the community. Services provided in, and through, the IDDS program should facilitate a positive change in youth behavior, bring about positive changes in criminal thinking, and provide the youth with the tools necessary to avoid recidivism or future criminal involvement. Services are designed to address family issues and needs with the goal of improving family functionality. Services are delivered consistent with balanced and restorative justice concepts.
